

Vacancy: part-time, freelance environmental education project officer

ARC is looking for a part-time, freelance environmental education project officer with an understanding of delivering education in the developing world.

ARC is a secular charity that works with the major faiths of the world to develop environmental programmes based on their own beliefs, practices and teachings.

We're looking for a highly motivated, enthusiastic and hard-working person who will fit well into our small but friendly team.

You don't have to come from a position of faith yourself but you will sympathise with ARC's aims and, ideally, have an understanding of faith and environmental issues.

You will also have proven, hands-on educational experience. Knowledge of environmental education is not essential, but preferable.

You will have an understanding and possibly experience of the realities of education in the developing world and a grasp of the key social and environmental issues confronting the countries.

The main role will see you working alongside current staff members, researching and developing environmental education materials for programmes being established in sub-Saharan Africa, with a major focus on water and sustainable agriculture.

This is a part-time freelance post for 100 days a year (approximately two days a week) on a daily rate based on £18,000-£23,000 pro rata, depending on experience. It is based at our office in Kelston, between Bristol and Bath.

Closing date: 5 September

Start date: 19 September
